

STATUS REPORT ON ACCREDITATION

Executive Summary

Accreditation cycles and processes are discipline-specific, thus vary from program to program. Regardless of the discipline, accreditation is meant to ensure minimum quality standards and continuous improvement; thus, every program receives feedback on how it may continue to advance the University and program missions.

The accreditation process typically spans more than a year, and in any year, Wayne State typically has 20 - 30 programs that are in the self-study or site visit stage. Accreditation decisions can take 1 – 3 years after the site visit, further extending the process. In 2018-19, 16 programs underwent an accreditation review. In 2019-2020, 7 programs are expected to submit materials or undergo site visits.

Informational Report

Information on accreditation at Wayne State University is compiled annually. Attached is a summary report on the accreditation status as of August 2019 (Appendix A). The report lists the university, schools, colleges, departments, and/or programs that have professional or specialized accreditation. The accrediting agency, the accreditation status, the annual cost of accreditation and the anticipated date of the next review are indicated for each program.

Wayne State has 42 accrediting or other agencies that examine programs. In addition, 9 graduate medical residency programs are subject to accreditation reviews. Costs for specialized or professional accreditation reviews are borne by the schools and colleges, and are included in their budgets.

Wayne State University participates in external accreditation by outside accrediting agencies for many reasons, among them to:

- Assure the public of the quality and integrity of the institution and its programs;
- Establish eligibility to offer degrees and certifications;
- Ensure programs meet specific certification or licensing requirements;
- Enable programs to receive public funding, enforcing minimum financial and administrative standards;
- Improve the quality within its programs;
- Promote institutional accountability.

Other universities, prospective employers, the federal government, and state professional licensing agencies recognize accreditation. The university also assesses the quality and integrity of all its programs through ongoing and periodic reviews, such as academic program review and assessment of student learning outcomes.

Accrediting agencies can be regional (institutional), disciplinary specific, professional, or specialized. Both governmental and non-governmental organizations provide oversight of the functioning of accrediting agencies. Under Title IV of the Higher Education Act, the eligibility and certification process for institutions of higher education and the official recognition of accrediting agencies are under the purview of the Secretary of Education, United States Department of Education (USDE). Agencies must meet established criteria/standards as set by the Secretary. The National Advisory Committee on Institutional Quality and Integrity assists the DOE in establishing those standards and makes recommendations to the Secretary on which agencies should be recognized. Those that are recognized are listed in the Federal Register. The Council for Higher Education Accreditation (CHEA) serves as a non-governmental national accreditation coordinating body for the higher education community and serves to oversee regional and specialized accrediting agencies.

Accrediting agencies have established a set of discipline specific criteria/standards for a program to meet in order to be accredited. Accreditors follow procedures that take programs through several stages of review, documentation, and analysis. Depending on the outcome of a review or the procedure of the agency, accreditors may require additional follow-up reports. Review cycles vary, with some accreditors requiring comprehensive reviews every three years, others requiring five or seven-year reviews, and still others requiring comprehensive reviews every ten years. In the latter case, a more focused mid-cycle review is usually conducted. The process may span several years before a final decision is made and cost anywhere from a few hundred dollars to several thousand dollars.

The accreditation review and decision-making processes typically involve the following stages which may span one or several years:

Stage 1: Establishment of Institutional or Program Eligibility

Initially, all programs that wish to be accredited must request applicant status. Every accrediting organization has certain preliminary requirements that must be met during the applicant status stage.

Stage 2: Institutional or Program Self-Study

Once the application is accepted by the agency, each program must prepare a comprehensive evaluation of its performance based on the accrediting organization's established standards or criteria. The self-study involves the preparation of detailed written reports showing how the institution or program meets or exceeds the standards, as well as how it plans to improve in the future. These reports may be prepared as confidential documents, although self-studies are shared with the provost and president prior to submission to the agency. Many agencies require self-studies be published after the accreditation review cycle has been completed.

Stage 3: On-Site Team Visit

The self-study becomes the basis for inspection of the program by an accrediting organization's review team during a visit to the campus. Team members talk to faculty, students, staff and administrators about issues and questions arising from the self-study. The typical review team is composed largely of peers who have prior training and experience in accreditation review and some knowledge of the type of program or institution being reviewed. Depending on the agency, review teams may include practitioners from the general public, representatives of comparable institutions or representatives from another sector of higher education. The team usually conducts an exit interview with the president, provost or dean to discuss issues that have surfaced during the review.

Submitted by: Keith E. Whitfield, Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs

Stage 4: Written Team Report

The visiting team prepares an accreditation report that includes judgments about the strengths, weaknesses and potential for improvement in the institution or program. Staff from the accrediting agency may meet with the visiting team to discuss the draft report. The draft report is usually shared with campus or program leadership before it is made final. Institutions or programs often have an opportunity to respond to the draft report before it is made final. The final report then is submitted to the accrediting organization's decision-making body, with recommendations about what action should be taken.

Stage 5: Final Decisions/Appeals

Accrediting decisions can take several forms, from granting accreditation, warning, probationary status and the withdrawal of accreditation. All accrediting organizations permit appeal of their decisions.

Stage 6: Monitoring

Institutions may be monitored between reviews, or may be required to provide annual reports, interim reviews, or substantive change reports. Annual reporting could include financial statements or updated curricular and planning information. Interim reviews are required when issues are left unresolved from a comprehensive evaluation. Substantive change reports are typically required to document important changes in the scope, standards or practices of an institution or program.

Stage 7: Public Disclosure

The USDE requires all recognized accrediting agencies to provide for the public correction of incorrect or misleading information or program releases about accreditation or preaccreditation status, contents of on-site reviews, and accrediting or preaccrediting actions with respect to the institution or program. If the institution or program chooses to disclose any additional information within the scope of the USDE rule, such disclosure must be accurate. Any public disclosure of information within the scope of the rule must include the agency's street address, email address and phone number.

The University asks that all accrediting agencies that visit Wayne State University adhere to a statement on "Principles of Accreditation" adopted by the Association of Public and Land-grant Universities in 1986. The statement describes standards and principles of conduct accrediting agencies should follow in conducting accreditation visits.

There is currently 1 program at the University with less than full accreditation. For a list of current citations, see Appendix B.

Council for the Accreditation of Educator Preparation (CAEP)
 1140 19th St. NW, Suite 400
 Washington, DC 20036
 (202) 223-0077

Accreditation through the Council for the Accreditation of Educator Preparation (CAEP) is required by the State of Michigan for all teacher preparation institutions. In Fall 2017, the Initial Certification Teacher Preparation Program was granted probationary accreditation for all initial certification programs through Fall 2019 as one standard, Standard 5: Provider Quality Assurance and Continuous Improvement, was found not met by the Accreditation Council. A probationary accreditation site visit took place on March 2-4, 2019. Although CAEP's official decision regarding the remaining five years of the current accreditation cycle will not be rendered until November 2019, site visit reviewers have indicated in the site visit report that Wayne State University has positively addressed and corrected all cited stipulations. WSU site visit reporting and evidence can be found on the WSU website: http://coe.wayne.edu/accreditation/quality_assurance_standards.php

In addition, Wayne State University has planned for an expansion of CAEP Initial Accreditation in the 2019-2020 academic year when all additional endorsement certification options must meet CAEP initial accreditation standards. This applies to endorsement programs not only in the College of Education (in Teacher Education and in Kinesiology, Health, and Sport Studies divisions), but also in the School of Information Sciences (K-12 School Library Media Specialist). Wayne State University is also creating plans to address CAEP Advanced standards, which will be phased in starting in 2019-2020. For CAEP advanced accreditation, the College of Education and School of Social Work will be involved. The programs for advanced accreditation include: Elementary/K-12 master's and education specialist administration programs; the Central Office Administration master's and education specialist programs; the Special Education Supervisor Education Specialist Program; the Special Education Director Education Specialist program; the School and Community Psychologist graduate program; and the Reading Specialist M.Ed.

The Michigan Department of Education and all initial and additional certification programs require students to pass the Michigan Test for Teacher Certification in the specific program area.

*This report summarizes the accreditation status of Wayne State University, its colleges, and its programs as of August 2019

2018 - 19 Status Report on Programs with Less than Full Accreditation

In 2018, there were two programs with less than full accreditation.

In 2019, there is one program with less than full accreditation. The program is:

- 1. Teacher Education program Probationary Accreditation

The table below lists the program, the reason for the rankings and the progress, where appropriate, toward improvements.

Program	2018 Status	2019 Status	Last Review	Next Review
Teacher Education	Probationary accreditation granted. Standard 5 (Provider Quality Assurance and Continuous Improvement) not met.	A probationary accreditation site visit took place on March 2-4, 2019. Although CAEP's official decision regarding the remaining five years of the current accreditation cycle will not be rendered until November 2019, site visit reviewers have indicated in the site visit report that Wayne State University has positively addressed and corrected all cited stipulations. WSU site visit reporting and evidence can be found on the WSU website: http://coe.wayne.edu/accreditation/quality_assurance_standards.php	March 2019	TBD
